SAYS WORLD IS FULL OF JOB'S COMFORTERS.

The Rev. Dr. Boyd Preached on "The Climax of Paith" at the Second Baptist Church Yesterday.

In his sermon on "The Climax of Faith" at the Second Baptist Church yesterday morning, the Reverend Doctor W. W. Boyd took for his text Job xill, 15: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." He said, in part:

"Job's friends have their counterparts in every age. When men are in trouble there are those who undertake the task of comforting without any qualifications for it. No wise man will needlessly proffer self as a comforter. Not that what these comforters say is necessarily un-true, but it is that you feel they are say-ing it only because it is the proper thing to say. Their real lack is sympathy, fellow-feeling. They have never gone back to first principles; and no man will ever speak a word to comfort another who has w the surface, faced the hard facts of life and wrought out for himself its perplexing problems. Here is the vital ence between Job and his friends; he difference between Job and his friends; he has gone down to first principles; and they have not. And, so beneath all his utterances you can trace a something which enables him to withstand all their superficial talk; a something well set forth in the words Though thou slay me, yet will I trust in thee.

"It was a trust in God, real and personal—that is, a trust in God's character, which even the most crushing blow could not destroy. 'Let him come to me as an adversary.' Job seems to say 'Let his dealings look like unmitigated harsheess; let no glance of loving-kindness brighten his eye; let him, as he has taken my property, my children, my health, take my life also; yet, in the anticipation of all this, I will trust him still; the ground of my confidence will remain unassaliable; I will hold fast to his faithfulness even when appearances seem most to contradict it." "Here we have faith or trust in its most concentrated form, the pure element de-will hold fast to his faithfulness even when appearances seem most to contradict it.

"Here we have faith or trust in its most concentrated form, the pure element detached from every ingredient that does not strictly enter into its idea, the very climax of faith. To understand how faith at last resches this uncalculating perfection, we have only to consider how it is that trust builds itself up in regard to an earthly benefactor. It begins with kind acts. Some one does something vary unselfish toward us. We at once begin to confide in him, to trust him. The child becomes aware, little by little, of the ever-present care and self-denying goodness of the parent. One act, however, does not usually furnish a rational ground of trust. Only when that act of kindness is followed by others does settled trust arise. Thus trust is, in fact, confidence in the character of another. The child, after long experience of a parent's love, acquires such perfect faith in the parent's character that he can trust even when the parent's character that he can trust even when the parent sets with seeming harshness.

"Usually this perfect confidence is not reached through one, or two, or three acts of kindness. Nevertheless, there are cases in which even one great, wholly unselfish act would command the lasting homage of our hearts. The application is obvious. It is by one transcendent act of love that Jesus Christ has fixed forever his claim upon our whole heart. He has given himself for us. How fully we may trust in him would be evidenced, even if we had no single additional proof of his love, by his dying, 'the just for the unjust,' to win us back to God.

"However we reach it, this trust is for the man an all-powerful fact ever after. Once trust becomes the settled habit of our hearts, life has no unsettling surprises for us. Even the adverse crises of our lives but call forth the cry, 'It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth to him good.' And such a trust is rational. It rests upon evidence. We have proved God worthy of our connid is displaced from the throne of the universe.

"And this trust, first built up of benefits received, gradually becomes uncalculating. So it is, indeed, with trust in our fellowmen. It begins in the experience of what they have done for us, but after a time all considerations of loss or gain disappear. We respect and love them now for what is good and noble in themselves. Precisely so it is in our relations to God. The highest reverence and devotion toward him is disinterested. Self and what self may gain or lose fade out of night. No words are felt to be exaggerated in expressing the joyful and absolute self-forgetfulness of the soul that dwells in the presence of infinite perfection. The almost startling language of Job is felt to be but the simple expression of implicit confidence in perfect goodness: Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

June Sale Women's Undermuslins, American and French

Looked upon from any point of view, the attractiveness of this June's Undermuslins surpasses that of any former year. Assortments are broader, styles prettier, and underlying all is a positiveness of betterment in the making-a nearer approach to the careful, painstaking sewing noticeable in garments made at home, with the deft touch of the expert designer and cutter added. The reasonableness, the lowness of the prices-quality considered-from the finest to the least expensive garments, is a feature of this store's merchandising and most noticeable in these semi-annual sales, when each price courts comparison.
